Description: Ahihi (N), a skinny, cute, mischievous snake, is given enough nourishment from observing the day-to-day activities of the Japanese people, and thus transforms into the same size as the famous Japanese giant saurians (called "G-zaurus" or "J-Jiras" by the local people), but soon decides to go back to his albino self. Other mythical species of the "Banana Islands" of Hawaii, however, are a little less mythical; like the nonbreathing manatee and the cephalopod mollusk known as the "tombow". These gentle and cute creatures are often mistaken by the local people for demons, even when they are small and harmless. A "Jangly" drop of magic is a precious and valuable gift that is given for free by any kind of god that wishes to be polite. Although the god expects in return great acts of thanks and good deeds, the jangly drop will never bring harm to anyone and it will never wish anything bad to any mortal. However, in the world of The Jungle Book, there is not only an abundance of animals that live in the forest, but also of people. Among them are the hunter Shere Khan and his terrifying "terror tribe"; the Shere Khan's group consists of a tiger, a leopard and some hyenas. He is one of the most famous and the only elephant in Tokyo. His name is a combination of two words "Gyozu" and "K
