ALT: I just want to say this: I don't know anything about SEO. But, as a web developer, I have heard this advice many times: Always, always, use alternate text. If you're on a blog like this and not writing posts for the long term, it's easy to miss it, but it will drive more visitors to an article if it always has corresponding alt text. BACKGROUND: When you're in a WordPress theme and editing a page, you can use the WordPress Dashboard to change a link's URL—that is, its homepage address. It's stored in a file with an HEX code. If you hover over a link and it says "About," for example, it's something like About . BACKGROUND: There's a similar code for an "Image," and to put it more simply, if you want a link to look like the placeholder that's on a page, you can write something like Learn more about this link . FONT: I see many designers out there going for multiple fonts. It's not wrong, of course. But, when coming up with a font hierarchy, start by picking one. Pick something that will serve you—not just for a few months but for longer. Set up a template with that font, and stick with it. Use a separate tag for unique customizations or for special use cases. You should only use Google fonts, and set up six or so styles at max. When choosing Adobe Photoshop, you have to decide if you need photo editing software or photo manipulation software. Still, if photo manipulation is more important than photo creation/editing capabilities, then the Creative Cloud subscription might be better for the features included.
