Good morning! I'm here with Rust Carey, a photographer and enthusiast who enjoys sharing his passions for design, photography, and nerd culture. First things first: what's on your movie playlist? I listen to a lot of mood music, so at the moment I'm listening to a lot of stuff. I listen to a lot of classical piano, I listen to a lot of jazz, a lot of hip hop stuff, especially beats from the 1980s to the early 2000s. But the playlist I listen to the most is actually classical music. I'm heavily inspired by Sergiu Comissiona, Per Nyerhag. I love his process of work, and his compositions. He's a really great composer and happy to do that. He's also a working artist, with a lot of exhibitions.

That's a hard question. It's always hard to choose one piece of equipment. My studio has everything I need. I like to have the most complete access to information. That's how I work.

When I do commercial photography, my job is to tell a story, and the story is the image. My job is essentially to tell the client what their product contains. So if you see a product and you like it, you don't need to know that product's price: the image tells you everything you need to know. It takes responsibility for your actions, your misurings: you're not dependent upon the product to give you the full experience of the product. So the story, I would act as a real estate agent for the product. You have under contract this building, you are in negotiations with these other people, you are looking for this kind of price. I am the graphic designer of the building.

Smart asked subjects to watch a series of three to five manipulated videos he had created from previously released The Blair Witch Project short films. Eighteen of the subjects selected after watching the videos were then asked to come to the University of South Carolina to complete a series of psychological tests. Smart found that subjects who saw three or more pieces of the original footage overestimated the speed at which their peers moved in the manipulated footage from The Blair Witch Project, the same way that viewers of the movie were overestimated how far the video had moved based on the shaky nature of the footage.
